The Sutherlin House is a two-story stuccoed structure built in the Italianate villa style. Typical of its type, three of its five bays extend beyond the plane of the facade in an off-center projection with the recessed portion of the facade fronted by a one-story wooden porch. The whole structure is surrounded by a heavy bracketed cornice and crowned by a very shallow hipped roof with a square cupola in the center which is ornamented with pilasters and a bracketed cornice. Except on the rear, all of the tall narrow windows have segmental arches with simple molded hoods. Two one-story wings on high basements have been added to the rear of the house for expanded library facilities. The architectural style of the house was carried through in these additions.

Unfortunately the interior of the house has been considerably altered to conform with its new function. The removal of the first floor hall walls has made that floor one open space, and the staircase has been relocated as well. Some of the very elaborate plasterwork cornices have survived along with several ceiling rosettes and the drawing room marble mantel-piece. The second floor rooms are generally intact although a partition between the north rooms has been removed, and the hall has been altered by the relocation of the staircase.

A number of the original furnishings remain in the house including the table on which President Davis is reputed to have signed his last official proclamation. Fortunately there exists accurate descriptions of the interiors and the furnishings as they were at the time of Davis' visit.

The Sutherlin House was built for Major William T. Sutherlin in 1857-58 on a four acre plot on Danville's Main Street. Major Sutherlin was a member of the historic Virginia Convention of 1861, and at the outbreak of the Civil War he became Chief Quartermaster for Danville with the rank of major.

On April 2, 1865, when it became obvious that the Confederate forces could no longer defend Richmond, the Confederate government decided to leave the city and set up a temporary capital in Danville. President Jefferson Davis and his cabinet arrived in Danville on April 3, 1865, and it was decided that the President would be the guest of Major Sutherlin. While at the house, on April 4, 1865, President Davis signed his last official proclamation as President of the Confederate States of America. It is believed that President Davis received the news of General Lee's surrender at Appomattox Court House while having dinner at the Sutherlin house on April 10th. That evening he and his now fugitive government left Danville for Greensboro, North Carolina, on their "flight into oblivion."

In addition to the historic events which took place in Major Sutherlin's house, the building should be noted as one of the outstanding examples of the Italianate villa style in Virginia.
